Author: Saylor Foundation

Aristotle thinks that aristocracy based in virtue is superior to other forms of government, such as oligarchy or democracy. Which of the following reasons is false as to why he thinks this?

Please choose only one answer:

- Democrats mistakenly think of equal citizenship as the ground of worth, without regard to specialization or virtue.
- Democrats mistakenly believe that the end of the state is freedom, and they identify the best life with the life of freedom to satisfy one's desires.
- Oligarchs think that wealth—a characteristic in terms of which citizens are unequal—is the ground of worth. They think so because they mistakenly think the end of the state is to accumulate wealth and property, and they mistakenly identify the best life with the possession of these external goods.
- Aristocrats are only capable of recognizing and understanding what is excellent and fine because of inborn talents and abilities passed from one generation to the next.

Author: Saylor Foundation

How does Socrates understand and explain the statement from the Oracle of Delphi that he, Socrates, is the wisest person in the world?

Please choose only one answer:

- The Oracle has been able to understand arguments made by Socrates, while the citizens of Athens are not able.
- The Oracle has been able to listen to all of Socrates's encounters with the citizens of Athens, and Socrates has shown himself to be the most wise among them.
- The Oracle must have meant that because he, Socrates, knows that human wisdom is of little or no value, he is therefore the most wise.
- The Oracle has been privy to the nefarious intent of Meletus's false accusations, and decided to intervene on behalf of Socrates for the sake of justice.

Author: Saylor Foundation

In the Crito, Socrates argues that:

Please choose only one answer:

- The laws and customs of Athens as administered take precedence over individual conscience.
- Because he has been unjustly charged and convicted, he welcomes death because justice can only exist in the underworld.
- Because he has been unjustly charged and convicted, his execution will solidify his argument made in the Apology that justice can only be realized by living a private life of contemplation.
- His execution will eventually cause the citizens of Athens to feel guilty for what they have done, and will ensure that his arguments and legacy endure.

Author: Saylor Foundation

In The Republic, Socrates attempts to define justice as a virtue of a human being through first defining justice as a virtue of a city. Which of the following is false?

Please choose only one answer:

- Justice at the level of the individual precisely parallels justice at the level of society.
- The guiding principle behind justice, both in the individual and in society, is harmony.
- In a just individual, the soul becomes entirely rational.
- In a just individual, the entire soul aims at fulfilling the desires originating from its rational part.

Author: Saylor Foundation

Why does Aristotle place such heavy emphasis on virtue at the personal level after stating that his purpose is to find the highest good for which virtuous action is undertaken, and that the science concerned with this good is political science?

Please choose only one answer:

- For Aristotle, virtue at the personal level and in politics are not distinct spheres. There is but one sphere—politics conceived in ethical terms—so he begins with an investigation of personal virtue.
- For Aristotle, virtue at the personal level and in politics are distinct but related spheres, and on the basis of logic, he begins with virtue at the personal level.
- Although the legislative architecture and the common ends at which a city-state aims might be virtuous, it is often the case that political rulers are corrupt, so Aristotle begins with an investigation of personal virtue.
- Aristotle makes the argument that governments can only be as virtuous as individual citizens allow them to be, so he begins with an investigation of personal virtue.

Author: Saylor Foundation

Why does Aristotle think political science is the most authoritative of the sciences?

Please choose only one answer:

- Because its subject matter concerns how human beings live together in a society, it takes precedence over sciences that have other concerns.
- Because it is concerned with the distribution of political power, it correspondingly has the most authority among the sciences.
- Without political science, the other sciences would not exist.
- Political science prescribes which sciences should be taught and legislates what must be done and what must be avoided. It also incorporates the ends to which the other sciences are a means, and does so not merely for the individual but for the polis as a whole.

Author: Saylor Foundation

Why does Aristotle think that justice seems to be supreme among the virtues, and that in justice all virtue is summed up?

Please choose only one answer:

- Justice can only be derived by abstracting from all the other, more worldly virtues, and by coming to an understanding of formal reality.
- All virtue is summed up in justice because there is no basic virtue that we might not be required to exercise in acting justly. It is supreme because its exercise perfects each of the other virtues in being for the good of another person.
- Justice is perfectly aligned with the rational part of the soul, and is not tainted by the emotions like the other virtues.
- When administered correctly, justice structures society in perfect alignment with the world of the gods.

Author: Saylor Foundation

Why does Socrates refuse Crito's entreaties to escape from prison and his pending execution?

Please choose only one answer:

- It would be against the law of Athens to do so.
- Although he disagrees with the verdict and the severity of the punishment, Socrates sympathizes with some of the arguments made by the prosecution.
- Socrates has heard from the Oracle at Delphi that he should not escape from prison and that he should accept his fate.
- Even though Crito's reasons for escaping are right, Socrates fears what other people would say about him if he did escape.
- Socrates feels his life has run its proper course, and it would not be fitting for a man of his stature and age to be a fugitive.

Author: Saylor Foundation

With regard to distributive justice, Aristotle argues that:

Please choose only one answer:

- Resources should be distributed across society to attain the maximum strength and prosperity of the city-state as a whole, compared with other city-states.
- Resources should be distributed away from those who have already crossed a certain threshold of well-being to help ensure that others will cross this same threshold.
- Situations and communities are just when individuals receive benefits according to their merits, or virtue—the most virtuous should receive more of whatever goods society is in a position to distribute.
- A basic level of resources should be distributed by the political class equally among all citizens to prevent discord and promote harmony, while saving resources for public festivals celebrating the gods.
